“Protester Violence Prevention” Rick Arrington – Crime Prevention Programs Manager at DCJS

Virginia respects the rights of all citizens to peaceably assemble and to express their views as part of the foundation of democracy. Unfortunately, some abuse this right endangering other citizen's right to live at peace in their communities. Research has shown that protests nationally are becoming increasingly violent and a change in how they are organized has forced criminal justice agencies to adjust in their planning and response.

This four-hour session will provide a snapshot of how protests and protesters have changed and new methods for preventing and mitigating violence in the planning phase of otherwise peaceful events. This session is NOT a tactical crowd/riot control course.
